Doctoral Day Overview

In the current scholarly climate, literary research is undergoing a fundamental methodological transformation. As the contours of the digital age continue to shape our access to texts, our modes of reading, and our critical lenses, literature PhD candidates are increasingly tasked not only with producing original interpretations, but also with articulating and justifying rigorous, adaptable, and reflective research methodologies.

This doctoral conference invites researchers in literature and closely related fields to critically engage with the methodological architecture of their research projects. We seek papers that reflect on the how of literary scholarship: the research design, theoretical framework, source selection, and the integration of digital tools within humanistic inquiry. Through this exchange, we aim to foster an international network of emerging scholars invested in reshaping and refining the practices of literary research in the 21st century.

We welcome abstracts that address traditional and emerging methodological approaches to literary research in the light of contemporary theoretical, technological, and pedagogical contexts.

Doctoral Day Objectives

1. Fostering Methodological Reflection
2. To encourage PhD students to critically reflect on the methodological choices that underpin their research projects, and to understand how these choices shape their interpretation and scholarly contribution.
3. Promoting Interdisciplinary Dialogue
4. To create a space for intellectual exchange across different literary periods, genres, and theoretical frameworks, including engagement with other disciplines (history, philosophy, linguistics, digital humanities, etc.).
5. Strengthening Research Design Skills
6. To provide guidance on structuring a doctoral thesis, including how to formulate a research problem, build a coherent argument, and select appropriate sources and analytical tools.
7. Enhancing Academic Communication
8. To give doctoral students an opportunity to present their work-in-progress, receive constructive feedback, and develop their academic communication and presentation skills in a collegial environment.
9. Integrating Digital Humanities Tools
10. To introduce and discuss digital methodologies—such as text mining, digital archiving, or data visualization—and explore their relevance, limits, and applicability to literary research.
11. Building Scholarly Networks and Peer Support
12. To facilitate networking among doctoral students, early-career researchers, and faculty, fostering peer collaboration, shared resources, and long-term academic support systems.

Doctoral Day Axes

1. Designing a Literary Research Question
2. Methodological Frameworks: From Theory to Practice
3. Corpus Building and Textual Selection
4. AI as a Digital Tool and Methodological Innovation
5. Research Ethics in Literary Scholarship
6. Structuring the PhD Thesis
7. Interdisciplinary and Collaborative Approaches
